

Laila and the Reef Rescue

English Mood Academy

yellow = new words red = compound adjectives

Laila was a seventeen-year-old student from a densely-populated city. She was self-confident and loved the sea.

One summer, she joined a well-known team of divers in the Red Sea. She wore her brand-new mask.

The water was crystal-clear. Below her lay a breathtaking reef — a colourful underwater city full of diverse life.

Fish with vivid, eye-catching colours thrive there. A slow-moving turtle swam past, and a magnificent whale shark followed.

But some coral looked white. "Warm water can bleach the coral," said Captain Omar, a good-looking deep-sea diver. "Coral is very fragile."

Then Laila saw something heart-breaking: a turtle entangled in an old net. It began to struggle.

"Plastic and nets pose a real danger," Omar said. "Rubbish is hazardous to marine life, and noisy boats disrupt the animals."

The team used a non-invasive method to free the turtle. It took a two-hour effort, but it swam away safely.

Back on the beach, they saw coastal erosion and a human-made reef. "Cleaning the coast is time-consuming, but a stitch in time saves nine," Omar said.

The dedicated, hard-working volunteers were well-behaved and careful. "Throwing rubbish in the sea is a short-sighted habit," Laila said.

That night, Laila heard the haunting song of a whale on a recording. "Never underestimate the ocean," she thought.

She made a nature-friendly plan for her school. Her old-fashioned fear of the deep was now a thing of the past, and the trip left a long-lasting memory.
