Although it was early, Omar's class was already at the Grand Egyptian Museum. It is a new landmark near the Giza plateau.

The building is a huge glass structure. Despite its modern look, it holds thousands of ancient artifacts.

A colossal statue of Ramses II stood in the hall. Omar felt small; still, he smiled and took a photo.

The curator, Dr Hoda, met them. "Good curation turns objects into a narrative," she said.

They climbed the Grand Staircase. The statues were arranged in chronological order, from each dynasty to the next.

Even though the stairs were long, nobody complained. The view of the pyramids was breathtaking.

In Tutankhamun's halls, they saw royal treasure. The golden mask was impressive, but Omar liked the ordinary tools more.

"Conservation experts restore damaged pieces here," said Dr Hoda. "They preserve our heritage."

The labels were multilingual, so tourists from many countries could read them. The museum is accessible to everyone.

In spite of the crowds, Omar joined an interactive workshop and made a small clay sphinx.

The day was long. However, it was memorable. "This museum left a deep impression on me," Omar wrote.

The End 🏺

A museum is a storyteller; every object has a story to tell.

المتحف بيحكي حكاية، وكل قطعة فيه ليها قصة.
