Omar was a first-secondary student. One day his teacher said, "Who took the initiative to help our planet?" Nobody answered, so Omar raised his hand. It was a big concern for him.

At home he saw bags of waste. "All this goes to the landfill after just one use," his mother said.

Omar decided to start a campaign at school.

His slogan was: "One bag at a time!"

"We must cut down on plastic," he told his class. "Plastic can harm sea animals and cause pollution."

His friend Ziad said, "Let's not throw away old bottles. We can reuse them or recycle them."

They brought reusable cloth bags instead of plastic ones. They also organised a book swap.

The headteacher liked the initiative. "Let's adopt green practices in every class," she said.

They visited a plant that uses renewable energy from the sun. "Eco-friendly technology can reduce costs," the engineer said.

"Wasting resources leads to the depletion of our environment," he explained. "We all play a role in saving it."

The students learned to transform old material into art. Their approach was simple and not costly.

Everyone wanted to fight against waste. The outcome was amazing: the school became cleaner and greener.

Omar smiled. "A sustainable future needs a strong commitment from all of us. Let's go green!"
